6. v. In phr. to sand for a wedding, see below.

Chs. It is still customary to adorn the ground in the precincts of the doorway of the house of the bride with tasteful devices formed of fine dry sand let fall from the fingers as the moving hand of the artist traces out the design, Co-operative News (Aug. 3, 1901) 934; Chs.$^1$ Orig. peculiar to Knutsford, but now extended to a few of the neighbouring villages. On the occasion of a marriage the friends of the bride and bridegroom put sand before their doors in patterns, the most approved pattern being like scale armour. Mottoes are also written in sand, one of the most popular being 'Long may they live and happy may they be; Blest with contentment to all eternity.' The sanding extends about halfway across the streets from each house, and if the bride and bridegroom are favourites, or are people of distinction, almost the whole town is thus sanded. . . The patterns are made by trickling the sand through a large funnel, occasionally sands of various colours being used. The origin of this custom is veiled in obscurity.

If one won't do she must have two, So I pray you, young damsels, to kiss two and two, ib. w.Cor. Little Sally Sander Sitting in the sander, Weeping and crying for her young man. Rise, Sally, rise, And wipe away your tears. Choose to the east, Choose to the west, And choose to the very one that you love best. Now you're married we wish you joy, First a girl and then a boy, Twelve months after son and daughter, All join hands and kiss together, ib. 159–60. [A ring is formed by the children joining hands. One girl kneels or sits down in the centre, and covers her face with her hands as if weeping. The ring dances round and sings the words. The child in the centre rises when the command is given, and chooses a boy or girl from the ring, who goes into the centre with her. These two kiss together when the words are said. The child who was first in the centre then joins the ring, the second remaining in the centre, and the game continues. In the Earl's Heaton game the child who kneels in the centre also pretends to weep, and dries her tears before choosing a partner, ib. 167.]

SCOUCE, see Scouse.

SCOUCH, sb. Yks. Also written skoutch. [skātʃ.] A children's game, similar to 'Chevy Chase.'

w.Yks. Played by any considerable number. If in a playground, a line is drawn across one end of the yard, and the space thus marked is sub-divided. An equal number of children then place themselves in each subdivision, thus forming sides. One of the players, in starting the game, 'goes out,' that is, runs a distance out of his den, as a challenge for any one from the opposing side to run after and try to hit him before he gets back again to his den. The challenge is at once accepted by one who has confidence in his speed, and the chase begins; meanwhile, the chaser himself may be chased, as well as any others that may follow. If a capture is made, the captured one has to go to the corner of the playground that is opposite his opponents' den, and there he stays until one from his side can approach him without being intercepted; if this is done, the liberated one and his liberator are allowed to quietly regain their den again, in order to resume the play once more. Captures and releases are constantly being made, and one side only gains a complete victory when it manages to make all its opponents prisoners, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Feb. 13, 1897); Days of pegtops and 'skoutch,' Cudworth Dial. Sketches (1884) 108.

Fish are scrawed when they are prepared in a particular way before cooking. This scrawing consists in cutting them flatly open and then slightly powdering them with salt and sometimes with pepper. They are then exposed to the sun or air, that as much as possible of the moisture may be dried up. In this state they are roasted over a clear burning coal or wood fire. Thus prepared and smeared over with a little butter they are said to be 'scrawed,' N. & Q. (1854) 1st S. x. 418; Cor.$^1$; Cor.$^2$ (s.v. Scroached).

SCRIBE, sb.$^2$ Nhb. Nhp. War. Brks. [skraib.] 1. A narrow strip of any material; a long and narrow strip of arable land; see below.

Nhb.$^1$ A long and narrow strip of arable land, of about two hundred yards in length by ten to fourteen feet in width, in the Common field at Newtown, Warkworth. In that town each freehold burgage had attached to it a half acre in Heather Leazes, or at the Moor; also a ten and a scribe in Newtown, the foregoing being freeholds. To each burgage was attached a half acre of arable land in Newtown, and a half acre of old grass in New Close or in Gilden, held of the lord during pleasure. In February, 1892, scribes and tens at Newtown belonging to the late Colonel George Forster were put up for sale. The conditions of sale describe three scribes as containing two roods and two perches. Each scribe thus averages $826\frac{3}{4}$ square yards.

News* (Dec. 9, 1899); The old Haff fishermen being unable to haul their boat up on the shore every landing made use of 'fore'n eft' fastenings, viz. a rope from the fore stem to the land, called 'da laand tow,' another rope with a stone attached laid out to seaward, i.e. astern, called 'da sea-tow' (J.S.). (60) Sh.I. They tell us that several such creatures do appear to fishers at sea, particularly such as they call Sea-trowes, great rolling creatures, tumbling in the waters, which, if they come among their nets, they break them, and sometimes take them away with them; if the fishers see them before they come near, they endeavour to keep them off with their oars or long staves. . . The fishers . . . think that it is the Devil in the shape of such creatures, Brand Zetland (1701) 115 (Jam.); S. & Ork.$^1$ Or.I. It was an unlucky moment when a fisherman cast his eyes on a sea-trow: panic and fear seized him, and his boat was instantly steered for the shore. These sea-trows would appear to have been the innocent porpoises, or pellacks, as they are called here, Fergusson Rambles (1884) 209. n.Yks. Poor Nancy Green com seeageling up, Tweddell Clevel. Rhymes (1875) 26; n.Yks.$^4$, e.Yks.$^1$, m.Yks.$^1$

Hence Seeagle-sides, sb. a careless, indolent, happy-go-lucky person. e.Yks.$^1$ 2. To insinuate; to inveigle; with up to: to make advances to; to 'sidle up.' n.Yks.$^2$, e.Yks.$^1$

SEAK, v. and sb. Yks. Chs. Shr. Also written seek s.Chs.$^1$ Shr.$^1$; and in form seeak w.Yks. [sīk, siək.]

1. v. To ooze, leak, percolate. Cf. sake, sb.$^2$

Chs. Sheaf (1879) I. 141. s.Chs.$^1$ Dhŭ ree·n)z see·kin thróo dhŭ ej-kop· ŭpŭ)dh roa·d. Shr.$^1$ Said of water finding its way, 'It seeks out of a hill,' 'seeks into a pit.'

Hence Seaky, adj. boggy. Shr. (Hall.), Shr.$^2$ 2. sb. A leak; any place where water can ooze in or out.

s.Chs.$^1$ Dhur)z ŭ see·k i dhis dree·n sùm·wéeŭr. Shr.$^1$ A pit that is supplied by surface drainage—that has no spring—and becomes dry in dry weather, is a seek:—there is a seek in the draining-pipe if the drain lets out the water.

3. A cloth-making term: the polluted liquid left after the scouring of wool or cloth; the process of scouring or washing.

w.Yks. (W.T.); From this substance oil is expressed (H.H.).

SEAK, see Sick, adj.

SEAL, sb.$^1$ and v.$^1$ Sc. Nhb. Yks. Chs. [sīl, siəl.]

1. sb. In comb. Seal-of-cause, obs., see below.

Sc. The technical name of a writing granted by a royal burgh, and having the common seal (or common seal of cause, as it was more usually called), appended by way of verification, confirming the privileges of a body of craftsmen or of a society, and having the effect of a charter of incorporation. In Glasgow nearly all the incorporated trades have still in preservation Seals of Cause granted to them by the magistrates and council. For the most part they were confined to the older incorporations; but not exclusively. In 1789 the magistrates of Glasgow granted a Seal of Cause to the Running Stationers or Cadies; in 1790, to the Society for managing the Sunday Schools in Glasgow; in 1791, to the Glasgow Society of the Sons of Ministers of the Church of Scotland (Jam. Suppl.).

2. The footprint of an otter.

Nhb. One man had been down to the river side, to see if he could discover the 'seal,' or track of an otter, Davies Rambles Sch. Field-Club (1881) xxxvi; Nhb.$^{1}$ [Mayer Sptsmn's Direct. (1845) 143.]

3. A wart on a horse. Chs.$^{13}$ 4. v. Obs. A woollen-trade term: to affix a leaden seal on the cloth by the official examiner.

w.Yks. The tentering, straining, viewing, searching, and sealing, by officers appointed for that purpose, Peel Luddites (1870) 33.

5. With up: to stop up.

w.Yks. 'We sealed the entrance of the bank carefully up.' Collier's evidence in a mining case (S.J.C.).

SEAL, sb.$^{2}$ Sc. Chs. e.An. Also written seel Sc. (Jam.) Nrf. Suf.$^{1}$ Ess.$^{1}$; sele Sc. (Jam.) e.An.$^{12}$; and in forms sale s.Chs.$^{1}$ Nrf. Suf.$^{1}$; seil Sc.; seile Sc. (Jam.); sell Slk.; seyle Sc. (Jam.) [sīl, sēl.] 1. Time, season.

e.An.$^{1}$ Hay-seal [ē·sl], wheat-seal, barley-seal, are the respective seasons of mowing, or sowing those products of the earth. Of poachers [it is said] that they are 'out at all seals of the night'; e.An.$^{2}$ e.Nrf. What seel of day is it? Marshall Rur. Econ. (1787). Suf. You don't mind being out all sales of the night, Cullum Hist. Hawsted (1813); Suf.$^{1}$ Ess. 'It is a fair seel for you to come at,'.. spoken ironically to them that come late, Ray (1691); He comes at all seles and seasons, Trans. Arch. Soc. (1863) II. 187; Ess.$^{1}$

Hence Sealable, adj. of time: seasonable, opportune.

e.An.$^{1}$ An inn is open at 'all sealable hours.'

2. Phr. (1) the seal of the day (to you, a friendly salutation; (2) to have good seal, to have a good time, to get on well; (3) to give a person the seal of the day, to give him a passing salutation; (4) to give the seal of the night, obs., of a watchman: to proclaim the time of night; (5) to pass the seal of day, see (3); (6) to keep good seals and meals, to be regular and industrious; (7) to mind one's seals and meals, see below; (8) to stand seals and meals, see below.

(1) Nrf. (G.E.D.) Suf. Raven Hist. Suf. (1895) 266. e.Suf. (F.H.) (2) s.Chs.$^{1}$ A housewife says she has had good sale at churning, when the butter has 'come' easily. (3) e.An.$^{2}$ Nrf. He ain't much of a frind, but I give him the seal o' the day, when I meet him, Cozens-Hardy Broad Nrf. (1893) 98. Suf. (C.T.), Ess. (W.W.S.) (4) e.An.$^{2}$ (5) Nrf. He came up and we passed the sele of the day, Emerson Son of Fens (1892) 245. Suf. (C.G.B.) (6) e.An.$^{1}$ (7) e.An. A mother will say to a boy at his start in the world—'Now, mind your seals and meals!' meaning not barely 'mind times and occasions, do everything at the proper time,' but as a broad and general counsel of discretion to have his wits about him and be careful of his conduct, Brooke Lit. (1892) II. 142–3. (8) Suf. A servant letting himself, asked his master 'if he would stand seels and meals,' it was, perhaps, for harvest, and I understand the question to mean, would he promise the usual time for rest and refreshment (Hall.).

3. Obs. or obsol. A favourable occasion; hence happiness.

Sc. (Jam.); Seyle never comes till sorrow be awa, Henderson Prov. (1832) 55, ed. 1881; Better two seils, nor ane sorrow, Ray Prov. (1678) 363. n.Sc. Now word is gane through a' the land Gude seal that it sae spread! Buchan Ballads (1828) I. 66, ed. 1875.

Hence (1) Seelful, adj. pleasant, happy, blessed, foreboding good; (2) Seelfulness, sb. complacency, sweetness of disposition; (3) seil of a person's face, (4) seil upon him, phr. a benediction on him; (5) Sellible, adj., see (1).

(1) Sc. (Jam.) Or.I. Ellis Pronunc. (1889) V. 792. Abd. Ane o' them was a seelfu' sight, Ross Helenore (1768) 103, ed. 1812. Lnk. Jinin' thae seelfu' days, As gif they'd been yestreen, Lemon St. Mungo (1844) 48. (2) Abd. She's just as gueed an aught, As wysse an' fu' of seelfuness an' saught, Ross Helenore (1768) 106 (Jam.). Ags. (Jam.) (3) Abd. A phrase still used . . . expressive of a wish for happiness to, or blessing on, the person to whom it is addressed (Jam.); Ramsay Remin. (ed. 1872) 140. (4) Abd. Seil upo' them, they're a winsome pair, Alexander Ain Flk. (1882) 82. (5) Slk. Short time had he sped in that sellible strife, Hogg Poems (ed. 1865) 287.

[OE. sǣl, time, season, occasion; happiness (B.T.).]

SEAL, sb.$^{3}$ Nhb. Cum. Wm. Yks. Also written seale Cum. n.Yks. w.Yks.$^{1}$; sealh w.Yks.; seel Cum.$^{14}$; sele Yks. 1. A generic name for the willow, esp. the Salix Caprea. Cf. sally, sb.$^{2}$ n.Cy. (K.), Nhb.$^{1}$, Cum.$^{14}$, Wm. (A.T.), Yks. (B. & H.) n.Yks. For cutting and carrying away twenty seales, Quarter Sess. Rec. (July 11, 1682) in *N. R. Rec. 2. To make hurdle-stakes; to be readily convertible into hurdle-stakes.

Dor. Said of coppice wood, Barnes Gl. (1863).

Hence Sailings, sb. pl. the stakes at the end of a hurdle upon which the underwood is turned.

Brks. The sailings project above the hurdle and are used to tie the hurdles to the foldstakes by means of an apse or apsis (W.H.E.).

3. sb. A rope or chain with which to bind cattle in the stall. Cf. sole, sb.$^{2}$ 2.

Sc. By means of this implement the devil and his myrmidons the witches are believed to exercise a considerable portion of their power in doing injury to men by the destruction of their cattle. Although a sele is so formed as merely to inclose the neck of one ox or cow in the stall it is asserted that two have often been found of a morning bound in one. . . But the spell is so limited that the poor animals suffer no detriment before they are seen by human eyes. If the person who first sees them does not give or procure instant relief they are inevitably suffocated (Jam.). ne.Sc. In other places the cow was taken from the byre with the seal on her neck. The witch had no power over an animal with the seal on its neck, Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 190. Cai.$^{1}$ Abd. Sells an' thrammels, Alexander Johnny Gibb (1871) xxvii. Frf. She . . . Abd. The taylors and cordiners . . . were set to work to make up thir cloaths and shoes, and sempsters to sew thir shirts, Spalding Hist. Sc. (ed. 1792) I. 289. n.Yks.$^2$ Der. With semsters and tire-woman, Jewitt Ballads (1867) 127. Som. (W.F.R.)

[OE. sēamestre, a sempstress (B.T.).]

SEAMY, adj. Nhb.$^1$ [sī·mi.] Of coal: thin, thready.

Applied to thin deposits found as partings between strata.

SEAN, sb. and v. Lin. Sus. Hmp. Dev. Cor. Also in forms sceane Cor.; sein(e Sus.$^1$ Dev. Cor.$^{12}$ [sīn, sēn.] 1. sb. A large net, esp. used in catching pilchards; also in comp. Sean-net.

Lin. Ray (1691); Lin.$^1$ A good-sized fishing net, larger than a donny. Sus.$^1$ Hmp. It is used as follows: one end is made fast to the shore; a boat rows out with the rest as far as it will reach, and then comes circling round with the other toward the shore, on reaching which one party of men draw at one end, and another at the other, until the whole is brought to land, Holloway. Cor. That picky dogs may eat the sceane when fule, Western Eclogue, in Gent. Mag. (1762) 287; Cor.$^{12}$ A net not less than 160 fathoms in length.

2. A boat carrying a 'sean'; also in comp. Sean-boat.

Cor. The fitting out of a sean costs little less than £1,000, . .

but it lasts much longer than a drift-net before it needs renewal, Quiller-Couch Hist. Polperro (1871) 109; The seine-boat, the boat with the net on board, was rowed where the 'huer' could see it; it was attended by a smaller boat to assist in shooting the net, Hammond Parish (1897) 58.

3. v. To fish by means of a 'sean.'

Dev. Reports Provinc. (1887). Cor. Seaning is not ancient at Polperro, the first being set on foot about the year 1782. . . Seaning has miserably declined of late years, and this fishery is abandoned at Polperro, Quiller-Couch ib. 109. [For a description of the process see Quiller-Couch ib. 105–109.]

Hence Seaner, sb. a man or boy employed in 'seaning.'

Dev. One of the men has charge of the boats, the seans, and the operations. He is styled the Master-seaner, Reports Provinc. (1887). Cor. Mackerel seaners do not readily give up the ghost of a chance, Good Wds. (1896) 16; Cor.$^1$

[OE. segne, a drag-net; cp. Fr. seine, a fishing-net (Hatzfeld).]

Sc. (Jam. Suppl.); The vain and fond rhymes of their Seannachies or Bhairds, Scott Waverley (1814) xvi. Or.I. The piper and the fiddler of the parish . . . were a privileged pair, holding a rank somewhat similar to the bards and sennachies of earlier periods, Vedder Sketches (1832) 108. Abd. The duty of chronicling heroic achievements fell into the hands of a distinct class, who cultivated the art with much zeal and emulation. These were the earliest Sennachies; and to their contests for superiority we probably owe the transmutation of tradition from prose to poetry, Michie Deeside Tales (1872) 102. Arg. It's the way of the Sennachies' stories, Munro J. Splendid (1898) 8. Ldd. The poems attributed to Ossian and other bardic remains are still repeated here by the old Senachies. . . In the winter evenings a number of Senachies frequently meet together and recite alternately their traditionary stories, Mason Statist. Acc. in Flk-Lore Jrn. (1884) II. 142.

[Gael., Ir. seanachaidh, a reciter of ancient lore, a historian (Macbain, O'Reilly).]

SEANTACK, sb. Mry. (Jam.) A fishing-line to which baited hooks are suspended by short lines, one end of the long line being fastened to the bank of the river, and the other kept across the stream by a weight. See Sean.

SEXTON'S-WHEEL, sb. Obs. Nrf. Suf. An iron wheel, formerly used in determining the date on which to begin a Lady Fast; see below.

Nrf. Arch. (1881) IX. 201. Suf. A pair of wheels of hoop iron about 2ft. 6in. in diameter, revolving at the centre on a pivot. In the radii of each wheel were holes numbered 1–3, 4–6, in which six strings were fastened. A person who in pre-Reformation times intended to honour the B. V. Mary, by keeping a Lady Fast—which had always to begin on one of the six Lady Days in the twelvemonth—would get the sexton to revolve his wheel, and thus set the strings in motion. Whatever was the number attached to the string the person happened to seize, indicated the number of the Lady Day upon which he would begin keeping his Lady Fast. Only two examples of a sexton's wheel are known to remain: one in Long Stratton Church, Nrf., the other in Yaxley Church, Suf. (W.H.S.)

Thus mixed, a draw was made, and the first ball gave its owner first turn to play, the second next, and so on in rotation to the last. Each player then laid his cap, crown downwards, against a wall, where they all formed a line of 'pockets.' Six or seven yards off, a pitch, or 'past,' was marked, and from it each in his turn pitched his ball. If a cap was entered its owner must dart forward, snatch the ball, and 'fire' it at one of the others, who had meanwhile all taken to their heels. The retreat, however, was instantly arrested if the thrower, ball in hand, called 'Stand aal!' [naming one] 'Nee flinchers; nee flinders!' Then all stood stock still. But if the fugitive anticipated, by being first to call out 'Nee stand aal,' &c., the retreat continued and a flying shot had to be made. A boy hit had to hit another in the same manner; but if a miss was made the next in turn resumed the pitch into the caps (R.O.H.). 2. Comp. (1) Shame-reel, obs., a kind of dance; see below; (2) -spring, the music to which the 'shame-reel' was danced.

(1) Sc. In several counties of Sc. this was the name of the first dance after the celebration of a marriage. It was performed by the bride and best man, and the bridegroom and best maid. The bride's partner asked what was to be the 'shame spring' and she commonly answered—'Through the warld will I gang wi' the lad that loes me,' which on being communicated to the fiddlers, was struck up, and the dance went on somewhat punctiliously while the guests looked on in silence, and greeted the close with applause. This dance was common in Frf. twenty years ago. The origin of the term is sufficiently obvious in the shamefacedness of the bride (Jam.). (2) ne.Sc. Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 95.

3. Used in imprecations: the devil.

n.Sc. Shame care. Cor. The shares are divided into two classes [at Sennen Cove]; the 'body' share contingent on personal service; and the 'net' share which falls to the owner, whether he be present or absent. Every boy on reaching sixteen years of age is enrolled among the shareholders, and receives a half of a body share. At the age of eighteen he pays £2 to the managers, and thenceforth as long as he can put a hand to a rope, is entitled to a full share for his body, and also a share for the net. All widows are entitled to a net share as long as they live, and when death puts an end to the partnership the original sum invested is paid to their representatives. The 'body' shares number about a hundred, and the 'net' shares a few more, half a dozen widows accounting for the difference, Longman's Mag. (Jan. 1902) 232.

The . . . shearling till the third shear-day retains the same name (s.v. Sheep). w.Wor.$^1$, Oxf. (G.O.) Suf. Rainbird Agric. (1819) 292, ed. 1849; Suf.$^1$ s.Cy. Holloway. Dor. The men were proceeding with the shearlings and hogs, Hardy Madding Crowd (1874) xxii. w.Som.$^1$ Lot 6. Ten shearling lambs.

SHEARMAN, sb. Obs. Sc. Irel. Yks. Shr. Nrf. Dev. Also written sheerman Sc. (Jam.) N.I.$^1$ w.Yks. Nrf.; and in forms sheaman Dev.; sherman Nrf. A cloth-shearer; one employed to dye or dress cloth; a cloth-worker.

Sc. Properly and originally cloth-clippers, cloth-dressers; but latterly cloth-workers, including all the crafts engaged in dyeing, fulling, dressing, and finishing cloth (Jam. Suppl.). N.I.$^1$ A workman employed at a bleach green. Obs. 'Wanted, a skilful journeyman sheerman and dyer,' Belfast Newslett. (1739). Shr. At Shrewsbury is a company of shear-men who for a long time have been the shearers or finishers of the Welsh flannels, Marshall Review (1818) II. 199. Dev. Disappeared with the disappearance of the woollen trade, Bowring Lang. (1866) I. pt. v. 15.

Hence Sheerman('s craft, phr. the art of cloth-working.

w.Yks. We know that 'webstercraft' and 'sheermancraft' (or cloth-dressing) were carried on in the district fully five centuries ago, Graye Walks around Bradford, 59, in Leeds Merc. Suppl. (May 22, 1897). Nrf. An art used at Norwich, where worsteds, stamins, fustians, and other woollen cloths are sheered, Bailey (1721).

[Villain, thy father was a plasterer; And thou thyself a shearman, art thou not? Shaks. 2 Henry VI, IV. ii. 141.]

SHEARMOUSE, sb. Sc. Ken. Sus. Som. Dev. Also written sheer- Cai.$^1$ Ken.$^{12}$; sheere- Sus.$^1$; and in forms shear-a-muze Dev.$^1$; sheery-mouse Dev.; sherra- nw.Dev.$^1$; sherry- Som. 1. The shrew or field mouse. Cf. harvest-shrew.

Cai.$^1$ Per. The wagtail and the shearmouse cheepit, Spence Poems (1898) 138. Ken.$^{12}$ Sus.$^1$ The country people have an idea that the harvest-mouse is unable to cross a path which has been trod by man. Whenever it attempts to do so it is said to be immediately struck dead. This accounts (they say) for the numbers which on a summer's evening may be found lying dead on the edge of the field footpaths without any wound or apparent cause of death. Som. Had not a shrew, or, as she called it, a sherry-mouse, died in her hand? Yonge Cunning Woman (1890) 19. nw.Dev.$^1$

2. A bat.

Dev.$^1$ A . . . took the bard in es hand as buys do a shear-a-muze, whan they say, 'Shear-a-muze, shear-a-muze, vlee over me head.' 2. s.Dev. Fox Kingsbridge (1874).

SHEAT, see Shout, v.

SHEATH, sb. and v. Sc. Nhb. Dur. Yks. Chs. Nhp. Oxf. Bdf. Cor. Also in forms sheathe Chs.; sheth Sc. (Jam.) N.Cy.$^1$ Nhb.$^1$ Dur.$^1$ Nhp.$^1$ Oxf.$^1$ [ʃīþ, ʃeþ.] 1. sb. A receptacle for the end of a knitting-needle, fastened to the waist. Cf. shear, sb.$^1$ 2.

Sc. (A.W.) Nhb.$^1$ The right hand needle rests firmly in the sheth as the knitting proceeds. It is sometimes made by tying a small bundle of straws together, or by a quill sewn into a fabric; but the old 'knittin sheth' was a small piece of fine grained wood, perforated for a distance of a few inches with a hole large enough to admit a knitting needle. These sheths were often of curious shapes and elaborately carved. n.Yks. (I.W.) Oxf.$^1$ It keeps one needle steady in stocking knitting, MS. add. Cor. Their straw sheaths tucked into the bands of their trousers, they clicked merrily away with their needles as they walked along the road, Longman's Mag. (Feb. 1893) 378.

2. Part of a plough; see below.

Sc. Since the introduction of metal heads to ploughs, in place of wooden ones, commonly called sheths or sheaths (Jam., s.v. Sock-mandrill). Nhb.$^1$ 'Plough sheth,' the body or central part of a plough to which all the other portions are fitted. Chs.$^1$ The sheath, is the iron which holds the beam and throck together, Academy of Armory, bk. III. viii. Bdf. This apparatus is generally fastened by an iron pin, immediately behind the mortice of the sheath, Batchelor Agric. (1813) 166.

3. The crossbars of a framework; the ribs of anything.

Nhb.$^1$ 'Waggon sheth,' the group of ribs forming the framework. 'Tram sheth,' the cross ties in a tram which connect the soles or main framework. 'Sheth,' in a ladder, the broader steps, introduced at intervals, between the rungs, to bind the structure together. 'Harrow sheth,' the cross bars of a harrow, intersecting the 'bulls' or longitudinal bars which run in the direction in which a harrow is dragged. Nhb., Dur. The ribs of a chaldron wagon, Greenwell Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). Dur. A ladder step, Gibson Up-Weardale Gl. (1870).

4. A division of a field.

N.Cy.$^1$ A portion of a field which is divided so as to drain off the water by the direction of the ploughings, called sheths. Nhb.$^1$ In the unenclosed town fields a group of parallel strips of ploughed land, which adjoined a similar group lying at right angles, formed a sheth. Hence the field names Upper Sheth, High Headland Sheth, &c. The arrangement was necessitated by the lie of the ground, the strips being made to allow of draining in the direction of the ploughing. Dur.$^1$ For the greater convenience of mowing, large fields are set out into sheths; in small fields this is not necessary, as they can be mown from side to side conveniently. Nhp.$^1$ A division of a field, which is generally so separated as to drain off the water by the direction of the ploughings, called sheths.

5. Obs. A salt-mining term: a brine-shaft or pit; a fountain of salt-water.

Chs. Ray (1691); Chs.$^1$; Chs.$^3$ The old name of the brine-pit at Northwych. Hence 'Sheath Street' in the town to this day.

6. Comb. (1) Sheath-whittle, a reaping-hook; (2) Sheth door, in mining: a door placed in a headways course where otherwise a 'sheth stopping' (q.v.) would be necessary; (3) — of boards, a group of cross-workings in a coal-pit; (4) — stoppings, (5) — walls, stoppings placed at intervals in a headways course for the purpose of coursing the air up and down a number of old workings or through a 'sheth of boards.'

(1) Gall. Armed with stones, knives, and sheath-whittles, Crockett Grey Man (1896) 323. (2) Nhb.$^1$ Nhb., Dur. Greenwell Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). (3) Nhb.$^1$ If we take the harrow as an illustration, the intersecting framework will give an apt example of the galleries of a coal-mine worked on the pillar system. The bulls of the harrow represent the heedwis of the mine and the sheth represents the boards in the pit. When a panel or division of a colliery is referred to, the group of parallel excavations which have been driven at right angles to the cleavage of the coal (the boards) are spoken of as a 'sheth of boards.' (4) Nhb.$^1$ Nhb., Dur. Nicholson Coal Tr. Gl. (1888). (5) Nhb.$^1$

7. v. To shield, screen, protect.

w.Yks.$^2$ A belt of trees is said to be planted on the side of an orchard to sheath the cold wind off.

8. To conduct the air backwards and forwards through a group of cross-workings or old workings by a proper arrangement of stoppings. Nhb.$^1$ Nhb., Dur. Nicholson Coal Tr. Gl. (1888).

SHEATHING, sb. Nhb. Dur. [ʃī·þin.] In mining: thin deals placed between the joints of tubbing in a shaft. Nhb.$^1$ Nhb., Dur. Nicholson Coal Tr. Gl. (1888).

SHEAVE, sb. and v.$^1$ Sc. Nhb. Dur. Wm. Yks. Lan. Hrt. and Amer. Also written sheeve Sc. Bnff.$^1$ ne.Lan.$^1$; and in forms sheaf Sc. Nhb. Amer.; shee Sc. (Jam.); sheeth Wm.; sheev Sh.I.; sheff Hrt. [ʃīv, ʃīf.] 1. sb. A slice. Cf. shave, v.$^1$ 4, shive, sb.$^1$

Sc. (Jam.) Sh.I. Tak' an' cut a lap o' tatties in sheevs, Sh. News (Feb. 10, 1900). e.Sc. He has a sheaf o' bread to eat yet, Setoun Sunshine (1895) 219. Abd. She only gied me a sheave o' loaf, Abd. Wkly. Free Press (June 25, 1898). [Amer. Dial. Notes (1896) I. 381.]

Hence Sheevick, sb. a small slice, a shaving, paring.

Sh.I. I held twa or tree tattie sheeviks ta da gimmer, Sh. News (Apr. 1, 1899).

2. Obs. A sheet of glass measuring a square foot.

Nhb.$^1$ Bought at Hartlepool fourteen sheif of glass, at 1*s.* the sheif, 14*s.*, Welford Hist. Newc. II. 358.

3. A pulley-wheel; a pulley of any kind.

Abd., Ayr. Pully sheeve (Jam., s.v. Shave). Nhb.$^1$ A belt sheave, a rope sheave, &c. Nhb., Dur. A wheel at the end of an engine-plane or at the top of a self-acting inclined plane, and round which the ropes run; the motion on the incline being regulated by a lever attached to a brake which acts upon a crib placed upon the sheave for the purpose. Also a grooved wheel used in place of a roller to support a rope, Greenwell Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). Wm. A drum for a driving strap; a pulley in a snatch block (B.K.). s.Yks. (W.S.), ne.Lan.$^1$ Hrt. Blocks for pulleys and sheffs, as seamen name them, Ellis Mod. Husb. (1750) III. ii. 40.

4. v. To slice; to cut in slices.

n.Sc. Will ye hae an apple, lady, And I will sheave it sma'? Buchan Ballads (1828) I. 88, ed. 1875. Bnff.$^1$ When followed by 'doon' it commonly means to slice down the whole piece; and when followed by 'aff' to take off one or more slices.

SHEAVE, v.$^2$ Dev. Amer. [Not known to our correspondents.] [ʃīv.] A method of using an oar; see below.

Dev. Conant was to take charge of the tiller with one hand and the after oar with the other, which he did standing in the stern-sheets and 'sheaving' or shoving with it, facing the boat's bow, gondolier fashion, Leslie Waterbiography (1894) 102. [Amer. To hold water with the oar to stop the boat or turn more quickly, Dial. Notes (1896) I. 381.]

SHEAVE, SHEAVLE, SHEAWT, see Sheaf, Shevel, Shout, v.

SHE-BANG, sb. Cor.$^3$ [ʃī·bæŋ.] A mining term: a kind of candlestick; see below.

A small piece of wood having [two sloping pieces] . . . of metal projecting on it. A candle is fastened below and so protected from dropping water when it is being carried about in wet places underground. A loop permits of the she-bang being hung on a button of the miner's coat.

SHEBBY, see Sheppie.

SHEBEEN, sb. and v. Sc. Irel. I.Ma. Also written shebbeen, sheebeen, shibbeen Ir. [ʃəbī·n.] 1. sb. An unlicensed place where intoxicating liquors are sold; an illicit still cabin; also in comp. Shebeen-house.

Sc. A sort of moorland shebeen . . . caught a fraction of the revellers, Haliburton Fields (1890) 32. Rnf. McKenzie's Act . . . that has done nothing more Than brought shebeens to every door, McGilvray Poems (ed. 1862) 207. Ir. Barlow Idylls (1892) 107; (M.B.-S.) N.I.$^1$ Uls. Uls. Jrn. Arch. (1853–62) VI. 45. w.Ir. Lover Leg. (1848) I. 246. s.Ir. A shebeen house, the auberge of Ireland, Lover Leg. (1848) II. 456. I.Ma. Have you been to the royal shebeen? Johnson Isle-iad, 52.

Hence Shebeen-(house-)keeper, sb. the owner of a 'shebeen.'

Ir. A shebeen-house keeper attends for the sale of his liquor, Carleton Fardorougha (1836) 223. Wxf. And may all sheebeen keepers that mix blue stone and acafortis with real wholesome whiskey be most exquisitely and genteely excoriated, Kennedy Banks Boro (1867) 97.

2. v. To keep an unlicensed drinking-place.

Sc. (A.W.) e.Sc. It was a case of shebeening and Tammy had been convicted, Setoun Sunshine (1895) iv. Ir. Barlow Idylls (1892) 112. N.I.$^1$

Hence Shebeener, sb. a person who keeps a 'shebeen.'

Ir. At this time the forge was owned by Felix O'Beirne, blacksmith, shebeener, and exwhiteboy, Barlow Lisconnel (1895) 128.

SHEBO, sb. e.Yks.$^1$ [ʃī·bō.] A tumult, disturbance. Cf. skewber, sheevo.

We'd a meetin ĭ vesthry las' neet aboot a new cess, an them at didn't want yan kick'd up a riglar shebo.

SHECK, sb. Obs. Wxf.$^1$ Ice.

SHECK, SHECKLE, see Shake, Shackle, sb.$^1$

SHECKLE, sb. Glo. Brks. Wil. Also written shekel Brks.$^1$ Wil.$^1$; and in form shuckle Glo.$^1$ [ʃī·kl.] A sickle.

Glo.$^1$, Brks.$^1$ Wil.$^1$ The first e is long. An old labourer, on being asked how he used to sharpen his ancient reaping-sickle, said, 'I did allus use to car' a grab [crab-apple] wi' me, an' draa my shekel droo un.'

3. Phr. Shepherd and sheep, a children's game.

War. I believe that the shepherd's dog is the true thief and hides his propensity in the following dialogue:—'Bow, wow, wow.' Shep. 'What's the matter now?' 'A leg of a louse came over my house And stole one of my fat sheep away.' The game is played as in Shropshire, Northall Flk. Rhymes (1892) 391. Shr. One player is chosen to be the shepherd, another the thief, and the rest the sheep, who are arranged in a long row. The shepherd pretends to be asleep; the thief takes away one of the sheep and hides it. Thief, 'Shepherdy, Shepherdy, count your sheep!' Shepherd, 'I can't come now, I'm fast asleep.' Thief, 'If you don't come now they'll all be gone, So Shepherdy, Shepherdy, come along.' The Shepherd counts the sheep and missing one asks where it is gone. The Thief says, 'It is gone to get fat.' The Shepherd goes to sleep again and the same performance is repeated till all the sheep are hidden; the Shepherd goes in search of them, and when found they join him in the pursuit of the thief, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 520. Cor. Children choose, by 'counting out' or otherwise, a Shepherd and a Wolf (or Mother Sheep and Wolf). The Wolf goes away and the rest of the players are the sheep (or lambs) and stand in a row. The Shepherd counts them—Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, &c. Then—Shepherd—'What shall I bring home for you for dinner, Sunday? I'm going to market.' Sunday chooses something. . . Then Monday, Tuesday, and the rest choose also. Shepherd goes away. . . The Wolf comes directly the Shepherd goes out of sight, and takes away one of the sheep. . . The Shepherd now goes to the Wolf's house to look for his sheep. . .'I smell my sheep.' The Shepherd then goes to one child, pretends to taste—using fingers of both hands as though holding a spoon and fork—on the top of the child's head, saying, 'That's my sheep,'. . till he comes to the end of the row; then they all shout out and rush home to the fold, the Wolf with them. A fresh Shepherd and Wolf are chosen and the game starts once more, Gomme Games (1898) II. 187–189.

4. Obs. A long-legged spider. Stf.$^1$ [(K.)] 5. pl. A children's game; see below.

Then she asks, 'How many sheep have you got?' They answer, 'More than you can carry away.' She runs and catches one—they two join hands and chase the rest; each one, as caught, joining hands with the chasers until all are caught, Gomme Games (1898) II. 189.

4. pl. A boys' game; see below.

w.Yks. If two only play at the game, it is known as the game of 'Buck, buck, ahmdy (how many) fingers du I cock up?' Where sides are chosen, we then call it 'Sips!' [sic]. In the latter case, a boy stands upright against a wall, serving the dual purpose of pillow and umpire. One side crouches and the other jumps on to them. In crouching, the first one stoops with his head against the abdominal part of the 'pillow' or umpire; the second croucher stoops down till his head is so low that he pushes it between the legs and underneath the posteriors of the first, and in this manner do the remainder of the crouching side place themselves, each locked as closely together as the vertebrae of their own backbones. The jumping side then play their part. The one who can make the farthest spring comes first. For the sake of impetus he takes a run, and then, as he nears the crouchers, he takes a bound with his legs outspread and alights on the back of one of the crouched ones with both his hands, and with such remaining impetus as he yet possesses whilst in that momentary position, he bounds forward again on to the back of one of those who are crouched nearer the umpire. In like manner on come the remainder until all are in position. Should one fall in attempting to secure a place, he causes his side to lose the game, and makes them have to crouch instead. If the first one who springs on the backs of his fellows be only a poor athlete at this kind of game, it may prove uncomfortable for him, for the next who comes after may possibly jump on to his back, to be, in some cases, followed in a like manner by others. When all are in position, then comes the trial as to whether the two sides shall change their respective places. The leader of those who have sprung on the backs of the crouched ones raises a digit so that the umpire can see it, and then exclaims, 'Dick, Prick, Anawny, Cherry, Berry!' the 'Dick' representing the thumb, 'Prick' the first finger, 'Anawny' the second finger, 'Cherry' the third finger, and 'Berry' the fourth. It is now the duty of the leader of those who are crouched down to guess which digit it is that his opponent has raised, and should he fortunately make a correct guess, the position of the two sides is reversed. . . Many schoolmasters forbid the game; and rightly so, think I—for it would be an easy matter for a player to have such injury to his spine as he would never recover from, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (June 5, 1897); w.Yks.$^{3}$ Can be played by two, or by sides, thus. (1) One boy bends down against a wall (sometimes another stands 'pillow' for his head), then an opponent jumps on his back crying, 'Ships' merely, or 'Ships a sailing coming on.' If he slips off, he has to bend as the other; but if not, he can remain as long as he pleases, provided he does not speak or laugh. If he forgets to cry 'Ships' he has to bend down. (2) Sometimes sides are chosen; then the whole side go down heads and tails, and all the boys on the other side have to jump on their backs. The game in each case is much the same. The mounting 'nominy' was formerly 'Ships and sailors coming on.'

w.Sc. The inhabitants of this island [Lewis] had an ancient custom to sacrifice to a sea-god, called Shony, at Hallowtide, in the manner following. The inhabitants round the island came to the Church of S. Mulvay, having each man his provision along with him; every family furnished a peck of malt, and this was brewed into ale. One of their number was picked out to wade into the sea up to the middle, and carrying a cup of ale in his hand, standing still in that posture, cried out with a loud voice, saying, 'I give you this cup of ale hoping that you'll be so kind as to send us plenty of sea-ware for enriching our ground the ensuing year,' and threw the cup of ale into the sea. This was performed in the night time. At his return to land, they all went to the church, where there was a candle burning upon the altar; and then standing silent for a little time, one of them gave a signal, at which the candle was put out, and immediately all of them went to the fields, where they fell a drinking their ale, and spent the remainder of the night in dancing and singing, &c. The next morning they all returned home, being well satisfied that they had punctually observed this solemn anniversary, which they believed to be a powerful means to procure a plentiful crop, Martin Desc. W. Isl. (1716) 28 (Jam.).

s.Oxf. 'Be you goin' a-shrovin', Rosy?' asked Mary Hester, Rosemary Chilterns (1895) 17; They once more sang their Shrove Tuesday ditty: 'Pit, pat, the pan's 'ot, I be come a-shrovin', A bit o' bread and a bit o' cheese, That's better than nothin'. Butter an' lard 'as grown so dear, That's why I come shrovin' 'ere, The roads are very dirty, My boots are very thin, I've got a little pocket To put the money in,' ib. 25. Brks.$^1$ The children go round singing: 'Snick-snock, the pan's hot, We be come a shrovin'. Plaze to gie us zummut, Zummut's better'n nothin', A bit o' bread, a bit o' chaze, A bit o' apple dumplin' plaze.' Hmp. At Basingstoke and in some other parts of Hmp. on Shrove Tuesday, the boys and girls go to the houses of the well-to-do classes in little companies. They knock at the door and then begin the following rhyme: 'Knick a knock upon the block; Flour and lard is very dear, Please we come a shroving here. Your pan's hot, and my pan's cold [Hunger makes us shrovers bold], Please to give poor shrovers something here.' They then knock again, and repeat both knocks and verses till they receive something. The line in brackets is not said in Basingstoke and many other places. . . At midday, the children return home with their earnings, which consist of money, &c., N. & Q. (1855) 1st S. xii. 100; Boys and girls 'go shroving' on Ash Wednesday (?Shrove Tuesday); that is, begging for meat and drink at the farmhouse[s], singing this rude snatch: 'I come a shroving, a shroving, a shroving, For a piece of pancake; For a piece of truffle-cheese Of your own making.' When, if nothing is given, they throw stones and shards at the door, Wise New Forest (1883) 178; Hmp.$^1$ I.W. This morning [Shrove Tuesday, 1855] I was suddenly greeted with a chorus of young boys' voices, chanting in simple rustic melody the following words. . . This party was succeeded by a second consisting of girls, and that by a third of very small children. 'Shroving, shroving, I am come to shroving. White bread and apple pie, My mouth is very dry. I wish I were well a-wet, As I could sing for a nut. Shroving, shroving, I am come to shroving, A piece of bread, a piece of cheese, A piece of your fat bacon, Dough nuts, and pancakes, All of your own making. Shroving, shroving, I am come to shroving,' N. & Q. (1855) 1st S. xi. 239; I.W.$^1$ (s.v. Shrauvers); I.W.$^2$ Wil. N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 209. Dor. It is customary for the boys to go about at Shrovetide with potsherds, to throw at people's doors. These are tolerated, but they are not allowed to throw stones. As they call at the various houses, they sing this doggerel: 'I'm come a shroving, For a piece of pancake, Or a piece of bacon, Or a little truckle cheese Of your own making. Give me some, or give me none, Or else your door shall have a stone,' N. & Q. (1872) 4th S. ix. 135; A custom prevalent in the counties of Dor. and Wil., with the addition of a second verse (the first varying somewhat from that given above): 'A-shrovin, a-shrovin, I be come a-shrovin; Nice meat in a pie, My mouth is very dry. I wish I wuz zoo well-a-wet, I'd sing the louder for a nut! Chorus: A-shrovin, a-shrovin, We be come a-shrovin,' ib. 209; Dor.$^1$

Hence Shrover, sb. a child who goes 'shroving.'

Oxf.$^1$ Pit a pat, th' pan's hot, An' I be come a srover; Et [eat] a bit and bite a bit, An' then 'tis all over. Hmp. Hunger makes us shrovers bold, Please to give poor shrovers something here, N. & Q. (1855) 1st S. xii. 100. I.W.$^{12}$

Hence Shufty, adj. of wind: changeable; blowing in sudden gusts; 'shifty.' Nhp.$^{1}$ The wind is very shufty.

SHUFT, sb.$^{2}$ Yks. [ʃuft.] A large number of individuals collected into a moving flock or crowd.

n.Yks.$^{1}$ Possibly with a tacit reference to a still larger assemblage of which it forms a constituent part. 'A! but there's a bonny shuft iv 'em,' speaking of grouse when packed and wild, and when consequently the sportsman may at times walk a considerable distance over a well-stocked moor without seeing a single bird. Then, suddenly, on reaching a point from which a new expanse of moor is visible, a large pack of grouse is seen to take wing, and the attendant's exclamation is somewhat in the above form. But I have never heard it applied to the birds as seen before they take flight, as they may be when the moor is whitened with snow. It is the flying rout, or pack, which is so designated, and consequently the idea of section or division, and that of change of place, may both seem to be present: 'there's a bonny lot of 'em, and they are shifting their place;' n.Yks.$^{2}$ (s.v. Shucks).

SHUFT, see Shuff, v.

(1) ne.Lan.$^1$, Nhp.$^1$, e.An.$^{12}$ (2) Hmp.$^1$ (3) Lan. 'Shutting of marling' had also its gala-day. Then a 'lord' and a 'lady' presided at the feast; having been previously drawn out of the marl-pit by a strong team of horses, gaily decorated with ribbons, mounted by their drivers, who were trimmed out in their best. The procession paraded through the village lanes and streets, some of its members shaking tin boxes, and soliciting contributions from the bystanders. The money collected was expended in good cheer at the feast, HARLAND & WILKINSON Flk-Lore (1867) 298.

3. sb. A yoking, the length of time horses are yoked for field work.

Shr.$^1$ Early in November, after the corn seed-time, the farmers make 'one shutting,' i. e. the horses go to the field about 8 a.m., and are not brought back until three or four o'clock in the afternoon; but in the spring-time, at the 'Lent-sidness,' they make a 'double shutting,' the horses being at work from 6 a.m. to 12, and from 2 to 6 p.m.

SHUTTING, sb.$^2$ Obsol. Chs. A harvest custom; see below.

The harvest-home feast: the closing of the harvest, Sheaf (1879) I. 336; Chs.$^1$ This could hardly be called a harvest-home custom, as it took place, not when the last load was brought home, but when the last field of corn was cut. Generally it was only those farmers who had finished in pretty good time who ventured upon a shutting. . . The shutting took place in this wise: The men used first to come to their master and ask permission to go through the ceremony, which, being granted, they proceeded to the highest ground on the farm, or near the homestead, where their voices could be heard a long way off, and there formed a ring. One of them then acted as spokesman and gave out the nominy. . . The first nominy was as follows, and was always given in the recognised form:—'Oh, yes! oh, yes! oh, yes! this is to give notice That Mester 'Olland 'as gen th' seck a turn, And sent th' owd hare into Mester Sincop's standin curn.' Then they took hold of hands, and, bending down, shouted at the top of their voices a prolonged and most unearthly, 'Wow! wow-w! wow-w-w!' Other nominies followed, varied according to the taste and oratorical powers of the spokesman, having reference to special circumstances, such as gratuities, donors, &c. After the shutting the men had an extra allowance of beer; and in the evening a supper, to which their wives generally accompanied them; Chs.$^3$
